

AAHA

Established in 1933, AAHA is the only exclusive companion animal veterinary association. AAHA is well known for its high standards in veterinary practices and quality pet care and promotes those standards within the veterinary profession and to the public. The Association develops benchmarks of excellence, business practice standards, informative publications and educational programs designed to help companion animal hospitals thrive.

AAHA believes in setting "The Standard of Veterinary Excellence." Throughout the Association's 77 years, its mission has remained the same: provide veterinary professionals with the resources they need to effectively manage their businesses and deliver the best in companion animal care.

The staff at The Cat Doctor is proud to say that we have been an AAHA accredited member since 1990. Our goal is to provide our patients and clients with the highest quality veterinary care and service available.

AAHA and ABVP are collaborating to encourage exceptional patient care and veterinary development. As leaders in the profession with a common goal of raising the bar in veterinary medicine, AAHA and ABVP support one another in the quest for excellence. ABVP certification promotes personal growth, while AAHA accreditation fosters team development; both organizations share the pursuit of excellence in clinical practice.
